JUNE 10, 2009 A DETOUR ON THE ROAD TO MIS. Team Red Bull NASCAR Sprint Cup driver Brian Vickers must have made a wrong turn after Pocono, because instead of heading west toward Michigan, he found himself in Manhattan. Making the best of the situation, he pulled his Camry up to the curb at 7th Avenue in Times Square, where his pit crew changed all four tires and refueled.

COFFEE MUG COMPARO

CONTIGO AUTOSEAL

Which no-spill, no-leak travel mug is best for your joe to go?

OXO LIQUISEAL

Autoseal top won't spill a drop, even if you drive like you're in a rally, but needs more lip space for coffee to cool.

Depressing button to open beverage flow isn't easy with one hand, especially when you're driving.

Full stainless-steel body is attractive, easy to grip. Coffee stayed hot for about three hours, not the claimed four hours.

Press here with index finger while sipping (carefully) from the other side. Easy, one-hand operation.

Screw top is intuitive, but its plastic base isn't very elegant. Mug has good heat retention.

Cavity around dispensing hole has just enough space to allow coffee to cool a bit before it hits your mouth.

THE WINNER: The sleek Contigo Autoseal stainless-steel mug ($20) feels great in your hand, never leaks, and holds two cups. Every barista we handed it to was smitten. Watch your tongue on the dispenser hole, though. gocontigo.com

THE RUNNER-UP: The Oxo Liqueiseal Travel Mug ($22) effectively equals the Contigo in function but doesn't look nearly as cool. Oxo also makes the plastic-bodied 360 mug ($13), with a handle, that can be sipped from all sides. oxo.com
