

The Coffee Mug of the Future Has Arrived

You've heard of five o'clock shadow and the three o'clock slump, but what about the 10:36 slurpshock? That would be our name for the horrible moment, usually around 10:36, when you reach for the cup of coffee you poured yourself that morning, put it to your mouth for a delicious slurp, and recoil in shock when you discover it's grown horribly, disgustingly, undrinkably cold. Fortunately, there's the Contigo autoseal mug, possibly the most effective weapon yet devised against 10:36 slurpshock. The mug has a patented vacuum-sealed top that helps keep your coffee warm for hours in a room-temperature environment. When you're ready to slurp, press the button, and when you're done slurping, the mug seals airtight automatically. This is the coffee mug of the future, people. And not a minute too soon.

Know someone who's nowhere near finished slurping by 10:36? Forward this.

More

Shockingly cute TV stars

Shockingly tasty apple recipes

Shockingly bad celebrity outfits... and some cute ones too

